

SHIELDING A CRIMINAL.

In today's issue is printed another installment of the revelations on the Kissane case, and an interview given in San Francisco by General Darr, the man who has been mainly instrumental in running to cover one of the greatest criminals that has ever been known in the United States. Readers of today's APPEAL will no doubt be astonished to learn that in San Francisco the very men who ought to be bringing this man to justice are making a desperate fight to save him. It is a disgrace to the name of justice, that a man who deliberately blows up steamboats, killing scores of men, women and children, for the simple object of gain, should be now at large.

It is claimed that since Kissane has made respectable connections and is now wealthy, that no good object can be served in bringing him to justice. Kissane is not a repentant criminal. He did not abandon his past life and do good, like Jean Valjean of Hugo's masterpiece, but now, when he is worth a million, refuses to make restitution to the people whom he has robbed.

Placed in a position where he needed money he would again embark in a career of murder, robbery, forgery, counterfeiting and arson. Through this man's cool deviltries and deliberate plots, it is estimated that at least one hundred people have met their deaths. There seemed to be no form of rascality and crime that he did not engage in, and yet when his career of crime is today the leading topic of conversation in California the San Francisco papers do not print a line regarding it. Wealth, official power and the press of a great State seem at the present time to be leagued together to protect this red-handed rascal from exposure, because he is in some remote way connected with wealthy families in San Francisco. If these people are honest they ought to assist in finding the community of such a criminal.

The families in the East, whose members were killed in the Martha Washington and other steamboat horrors, also have their rights, and the blood of those murdered people today cries for vengeance.

There is no way in which the ends of justice can be subserved, except by the imprisonment for life or hanging of this scoundrel despite his money and connections.

If the press of San Francisco have any respect for their profession left they will no longer be accessory to the man's crimes by assisting in their concealment.

Home Library Books.

L. A. Please look up article headed "Literary Revolution."

Arbor Day.

The Arbor Day committee had a business meeting last night. It was decided to collect enough money selling trees at 25 cents apiece to pay the expenses of transportation etc., and then give the trees away to the school children, various churches, Orphan's Home, Cemetery and in fact, any one who would plant and care for them. Further particulars will be published on Tuesday morning.
